WELCOME TO THE LATEST FROM OUR COMMUNITY

It's shaping up to be a wonderfully busy month here in Elliston, with plenty happening as we head into the festive season. Our Community Christmas Street Party is just around the corner, and there will be a great range of school holiday activities to keep the kids entertained throughout the break.

Please note that ECVIC opening hours may vary over the Christmas period. Any changes will be shared on our social media pages and displayed on posters around town, so keep an eye out for updates.

COMMUNITY VOLUNTEER SPOTLIGHT Kristy Newton

What do you enjoy most about volunteering?

In small towns we can really make a different and achieve things by working together. When we achieve goals we can then enjoy them and make our community a better place. In a way we are doing something that others can also enjoy and benefit from.

What do you enjoy doing in your spare time?

Walking, driftwood art, going to the beach and spending time with the family

What's something you're really proud of?

Really proud of my 3 children. They are being the best people they can be and all travelling different paths.

Do you have any favourite quotes or sayings that resonate with you?

Always believe you can ...

Where is your favourite place to visit in our region?

I think where we live is pretty special! I also love swimming in the channels at the back of Venus Bay. Its like you could be anywhere in the world.

WEDGE TAILED EAGLE

The SACWA Elliston Branch presents the next of our bird articles for your interest.

From the last Echo (October), we gave you some true or false statements for you to ponder. All statements were true, so well done if you achieved 8/8! We covered courtship and mating behaviour, and monogamous relationships.

This month's issue deals with the wedge tailed eagle ecological niche in the habitat, important ecosystem services, nesting, home range, and diet.

Email the Elliston VIC for last month's edition if you have not read part 1. It is highly recommended that readers consult further reading: Landscape.sa.gov.au Wedge Tailed Eagle in agricultural areas Fact sheet 2024. The WTE has important ecological functions for the natural environment and for farmers. They help control rabbits (comprising 30–70% of their diet), and are one of the few predators which kill foxes and cats. This also assists in controlling toxoplasmosis carried by feral cats (google the effects on stock, particularly ewes and lambs).

The WTE supports farm hygiene by feasting on dying animals and carrion. There are many livestock practices that support fat score in ewes and healthy lamb weight, able to suckle immediately after birth. And most importantly, the WTE indicate environmental health by providing early warning for climate change impacts and harmful chemicals.

Continuing on from last month: by the age of 4 years, if they have learnt how to fend for themselves, and have learnt a wariness of traps, poisoning, shooting, vehicles and road kill, birds with adult plumage now set about finding a mate and establishing a territory. The pair establish large home ranges in which the birds hunt for food but do not all defend. There is usually overlap between home ranges of two or more breeding pairs and of nonbreeding birds. Home range varies with habitat, food availability and season: they prefer open woodland, forests and mountains with good ground cover for hunting. How large is a home range? (See end of article.)

WTE build their nests in prominent locations with a good view of the surrounding countryside, usually with the onset of winter. They are usually built in the tallest tree in the territory, cliff faces, ridges or bluffs, telegraph poles, or on the ground, away from disturbance. A pair can have 10 different nests, often using different nests each year. Diet has been studied by CSIRO scientists for over 30 years, with data collected from old and occupied nests and bone and other fragments from around the nests.

WTE mostly eat:

- Carrion, roadkill and other carcasses
- Live prey including rabbits and hares 30–70% of the diet
- Macropods (19%), joeys are the most common age group, can take full grown red kangaroos and euros (kill by striking at the head and neck)
- Reptiles including shinglebacks, bluetongues, skinks, goannas and monitors 18%. Snakes are not a feature.
- Corvids: crows and ravens (5–8%): these are ground feeders sharing the same food (carrion)
- Foxes and cats, also predators of rabbits and eaters of carrion (3–5%)
- Lambs: 2.08%: Of the 2,179 carcasses examined, 1/3 showed evidence of mutilation after death. 54% of the lambs died from starvation/mismothering (the major cause of death)
- Goats are also hunted, particularly on steep rocky slopes

Some home range examples: 3,200 acres (edge of the Nullarbor Plain); Canberra (7,000 acres), lightly wooded ridges and sheep grazing country (250 sq mls).

ELLISTON MARKETS

What a brilliant day we had at the Elliston Markets on Saturday, 29th November! This month we welcomed a record 33 stalls, offering everything from handmade crafts and recycled surfboard art to delicious baked goods and fresh local produce. The weather stayed perfect, and it was wonderful to see around 150–200 people enjoying the day in the parklands.

The markets were buzzing with friendly chatter, laughter, and the hum of a community coming together. Stallholders were delighted with the turnout and the support from locals and visitors alike, and many commented on how much they enjoyed the lively, welcoming vibe. A special thank you to Sophie Barkway and The Mistys for their fantastic live music, you really set the tone for the morning!

We also want to give a heartfelt thanks to Leanne Kelly for everything she does behind the scenes to help the markets run so smoothly, your dedication is truly appreciated. And of course, a huge thank you to all the stallholders, volunteers, and everyone who helped make the day such a success. The Elliston Markets wouldn't be what they are without you, and we can't wait to see you all again at the next market! Keep an eye out for our next Easter markets.
